

Limberlost Corner

Limberlost Corner is an area that is found to the north of Harbour Lodge, the car park and the gravel path that leads away from it. This area is of particular benefit to families who need easy access from the car park. Plots are available for burial or for cremated remains and are all charged as Standard rate. Limberlost Corner is the closest point to the main road and as such there is a constant awareness of the world outside. Even so, rabbits can be seen along the borders at all times of the day and in turn this often attracts the attention of Buzzards. The hedgerows are part mature and part new and are very attractive during summer months.

Planted in 2005 and 2008 with a variety of deciduous and evergreen trees, Limberlost Corner is fast becoming attractive woodland. Generally in this area the grass is allowed to grow freely and during early summer an attractive meadow is found with some interesting wild flowers. Paths are cut into the meadow and the burial areas are in open glades which are mown regularly.

Limberlost Corner will appeal to families who appreciate nature and wildlife but like the reassurance of being close to their car and to outside life.

Woodland

There are a number of sections at Harbour View where open woodland is being established. Planting in these sections began when Harbour View first opened and is ongoing. Every year consideration is given to new planting whether this is to replace trees that are of poor quality or to extend the woodland into new areas. Most of the new woodland is an extension to the ancient woodland that can be found around Harbour View.

A variety of evergreen and deciduous trees will be found and while Oak, Chestnut and Beech form a considerable part of the woodland, clusters of less well known trees will also be found. Consideration has been given to the colours of the flowers and foliage through the seasons and spring and autumn in particular offer a beautiful scene. The highlight of spring being an area of Magnolia trees in pink and white blossom, which complements the clusters of spring bulbs, in particular Daffodils.

Small clusters of Yew resonate with the ancient association this tree has with the burial of the dead.

The grass in the woodland is allowed to grow unchecked through spring and early summer providing areas of meadow and some interesting wild flowers; butterflies, dragonflies and other insects are prolific at such times and in turn encourage some very interesting birds to the areas. You may notice bird boxes and bat boxes hidden among the trees along with the more obvious bird feeding tables. Footpaths are cut into the meadow and burial plots are available in open glades, which are mown regularly throughout the year.

Plots are available for burial and for cremated remains and are charged at the Woodland rate.

The Woodland sections will appeal to families who enjoy the wonders of nature.

Purbeck View

The central areas and higher ground of Harbour View enjoy panoramic views across the back waters of Poole Harbour, Corfe Castle and the Purbeck Hills. From the top of the hill nearest to Harbour Lodge the view extends for many miles. To retain these views, there is very little planting of trees and what there is, is closely controlled to avoid spread of the branch canopy.

The Purbeck View sections bisect woodland areas, which provide a natural border and sanctuary to the birds and wildlife that can be found. The grass is kept under closer control than the meadows of the woodland.

Plots are available for both burial and for cremated remains and are charged at the Purbeck View rate. In addition some plots have an annual maintenance charge. Plots on top of the hill and adjoining pathways are quoted upon application.

Purbeck View sections will appeal to families who feel an association with the harbour or Purbeck Hills.

Cherry Tree Border

In the middle of Harbour View and using a mature hedgerow and a group of old Oak trees as a background, Cherry Tree Border offers plots in both the Woodland and the Purbeck View charge rate.

Only cremated remains plots are available. Cremated remains can also be scattered along this border.

Along the hedgerow, benches and Cherry Trees form a line from which a view of Purbeck can be enjoyed. The hedgerow merges into the mature woodland adding the benefit of spring Daffodils and Bluebells to the blossom of the Cherry Trees.

Trokes Border

Forming a small border area between open woodland and a boundary line of mature trees, Trokes Border offers plots for cremated remains at the Woodland charge rate. Cremated remains can also be scattered on this border.

Being located close to a cluster of Magnolia trees, Trokes Border is particularly attractive in Spring as the abundance of Daffodils in bloom complement the blossom of the trees. Bird and insect life are particularly notable in this area and benches are available for visitors who wish to sit and take in the surroundings.

Trokes Border is a quiet and peaceful area served by a grass pathway from the lodge car park, through woodland and meadow, offering the visitor a picturesque walk of 3 or 4 minutes.

The Orchard

Still in its infancy, the Orchard is a small section, in the middle of Harbour View, bordered by a gravel pathway and a mature hedgerow. It appears a little more formal than other more open areas. Planted with a variety of fruit trees the Orchard promises to be an area of great beauty as it matures.

The Orchard looks out over open ground and the Harbour View pond, which is visited by ducks and wading birds. In 2008 two nests of ducklings were raised.

The Orchard offers cremated remains plots at woodland charge rate and cremated remains can be scattered along the hedgerow border.

Tree Bench Garden

Adjoining a gravel pathway that is 100 yards from the farm car park, the Tree Bench Garden offers a small section with easy and level access.

Plots are available for cremated remains and are at Purbeck View charge rate.

Visitors using the bench look out over an area of woodland to the Purbeck Hills beyond.

Bluebell Walk

An area of ancient woodland to which we offer limited access due to the fragile nature of its environment. Coming into its own in late spring, as its name suggests, the section is a carpet of Bluebells. Cremated remains may be scattered along the border of the Bluebell Walk. No burial plots are available in this section.

This section is generally left to nature; very little maintenance is provided. Visitors need to be prepared for uneven and slippery ground but with patience, will be rewarded with a beautiful unspoilt environment.
